A. Oxford and Blenheim Palace Tour

Oxford is England's oldest university, dating back to the 11th century. Come and see its impressive colleges, famous libraries and other buildings, in which well-known scientists made their discoveries. Then, visit Blenheim Palace, which is located in Woodstock, just 8 miles from Oxford. It was built to reward John Churchill for his victory over the French in 1704.

B. Kenwood House

Set in the beautiful park of Hampstead Heath, Kenwood House is one of the most magnificent visitor attractions. This elegant villa houses a superb collection of portraits by great Elizabethan masters. Don't miss the chance for an educational walk through woods and meadows full of rabbits, birds and butterflies.

C. Beamish Museum

Beamish Museum, set in over 300 acres, recreates life in the North of England in the early 1800s. Guides wearing 19th century clothes welcome visitors and explain how local people lived and worked then. Step on board our trams and we'll transport you into the past. A favourite of British directors, the place has been used as a location for many historical drama series.

D. Weald and Downland Open Air Museum

This is a very special place with a fascinating collection of nearly 50 old houses, dating from the 13th to the 19th century. They have been saved from destruction and rebuilt to their original form. You can see a majestic farmhouse from Kent, a market hall from Hampshire, a Victorian school and a medieval shop. Walk around this unique place and feel as if you were on a film set.

E. The Cuming Museum

The museum tells the history of Southwark through many unusual objects. It will be of interest to those who like archaeology and social and natural history. Opened in 1906, the museum was a gift from a father and son, Richard and Henry Cuming, who for over 100 years put together these unique items. The museum offers a variety of activities for visitors, including making historical costumes.

AN AMAZING DOG

‘He’s such a good dog, so calm and relaxed.’ This is what everyone says about my four-year-old black Labrador, Ozzi. He has been that way since he was a puppy. He doesn’t like to run or jump and he hates to swim, but he comes when I call him. When I walk in the door, he greets me, so excited to see me.

‘He would be the perfect therapy dog,’ my grandmother said, but I wasn’t sure if I should really get Ozzi (and myself) involved because I didn’t understand how my lazy dog could help people. However, I decided to try. I contacted a local organization called Faithful Friends. Ozzi had to go through a training programme and some tests to make sure he was a good choice.

Ozzi passed the tests (I don’t know how), and we were asked to visit rehabilitation homes every other Tuesday. It was difficult for me to imagine exactly what Ozzi and I would do there and how that would help anyone. Our first visit was to a rehabilitation home where people live when they are recovering from serious operations. Five minutes after our arrival, we noticed a man who looked very sad and lonely. It was heartbreaking. However, as soon as he saw Ozzi, he sat up in his wheelchair, smiled, and called us over. His name was John, and he had had an accident months before. He was still not able to go back home to his black Labrador. He missed his dog, so just being near a dog so much like his own really made him happy. He showed me a picture of Maggie, who really looked like Ozzi. John looked forward to our visits, and we continued to see him until he was well enough to return home to live with his dog.

Another patient was Elli, who loved to play with Ozzi. She liked to talk about how she used to have a little poodle that was like a baby to her, and I think being around Ozzi brought back those good memories.

Meeting these people and many others opened my eyes to the benefits of using dogs for therapy. I have realized that the best thing Ozzi has ever done is to be a good friend to those who need one.

SILAS MARNER

Silas Marner moved to the village of Raveloe. He lived in a small house outside the village. Not many people came near it. They knew Silas was a strange man, and they were a little afraid of him. He was a mysterious person for the villagers. He lived alone and had very little contact with other villagers. He went to work and came back home. He never invited people to his house, and he never went out to meet the other men from the village. There was another reason why the villagers were afraid. When Silas was angry, he looked at people in such a way that they felt frightened and uneasy.

One day the noise coming from the house attracted the attention of some village boys. They came close to Silas's house and stood there listening. When Silas saw them, he opened the door and, without a word, he fixed his large brown eyes on the boys. He looked hard at them because he could not see very well. But the boys did not know this. They ran away in fear.

Silas was not interested in the village people. He was only interested in his work. He worked all day and far into the night. In this way he didn't think about his past. He hated the past. And the troubles from the past hurt him less when he worked. Because he worked so hard, he earned a lot of money. There was no one else who could do his job in Raveloe, and people paid for his work in gold and silver coins. He spent little on himself, but he got more and more interested in gold and silver. Every night he took the coins out and counted them. He loved their shape and colour and their shining faces.

He kept them in a metal box under his bed. He took some stones out of the floor and made a hole. Each night, after counting the coins, he returned the box to the hole. Then he put the stones back, and covered them with sand from the garden. He wasn't afraid of thieves, he just wanted to have the money close at hand. He couldn't imagine putting it in a bank.

Year after year Silas worked and filled the metal box with coins. He still lived alone in the same house. Hard work changed the shape of his back, his arms and legs. He could not stand up straight any more. He was not yet forty years old, but his face was already dry and yellow like an old man's.

Fifteen years passed. It is a long time, but Silas Marner's life showed little change. At night he closed his doors and took out his money. Just looking at it made him happy. Because the metal box was too small to hold it all, he put the money into two bags. In both bags there was more gold than silver. He spent some small silver coins on his own needs. He often pushed his hands through the coins and counted them. 'And others are on their way,' he used to say to himself.
